

WEBSITE UPDATE 10-04-06

The Supreme Court of the United States has denied the petition of the United Retired Pilots Benefit Protection Association for a hearing on decisions rejecting the participation of representatives of the retired pilots in discussions between United Airlines and the Air Line Pilots Association leading to agreements concerning the termination of the United Airlines Pilots Defined Benefit Pension Plan.

The Court is not required to provide any explanation of their decisions and the order merely stated that the petition was rejected. The Court only accepts a very small percentage of the cases that are presented to it for review.
