DP3 and Class Claimants Withdraw Motion for Class Certification

In November of 2006, DP3 entered into a settlement (the “Settlement”) with Delta whereby Delta agreed to allow all retired pilots an unsecured claim (the “Post-Termination Claim”) for non-qualified benefits lost as a result of Delta’s termination of the Bridge Plan and Supplemental Plan. Pursuant to the terms of the Settlement, Delta calculated the Post-Termination Claim using a specific methodology. In August of 2007, DP3 and four retired pilots filed a class proof of claim (“Class Claim”) on behalf of all retired pilots contending that Delta did not account for certain benefits in the calculation of the Post-Termination Claim. DP3 requested an additional unsecured claim for these unaccounted for or “Disregarded Benefits.”

In response to the Class Claim, Delta, among other things, maintained that the pursuit of the Class Claim was an attack on the Settlement. It was Delta’s position that such an attack would allow Delta to rescind the Settlement and recover any distributions previously made to retired pilots on account of the Post-Termination Claim under Delta’s confirmed bankruptcy plan. Rather than place the benefits of the Settlement and the distributions already made to retired pilots at risk, DP3 and the individual class claimants elected to withdraw the Class Claim. The withdrawal of the Class Claim was announced at the hearing held on November 14, 2007 before the Bankruptcy Court.

The decision to withdraw the Class Claim will have no impact on the validity of any proof of claim previously filed by any individual retired pilot seeking the “Disregarded Benefits.” Retired pilots that filed such individual claims should be notified directly by Delta of any objection and of the date of the consolidated hearing. DP3 anticipates that the consolidated hearing will be held during the first quarter of 2008.
